Clyde Jay Was Anchor in Early Days of KGGM-TV

Albuquerque Journal (NM) | 1 October 2003

Clyde Joseph Ling

Clyde Joseph Ling, a news anchor known in the 1960s as Clyde Jay at Albuquerque's KGGM-TV, now KRQE-TV, died Thursday in Arizona. He was 82.

Ling, who was born in Johnstown, Penn., began his radio career in that state and came to New Mexico for his health after a stay in Hollywood, said his stepson, Steven Jurgens-Ling.

Ling was a self-made man who had survived a difficult, Depression-era childhood. He was attracted to TV broadcasting while working as a messenger boy in Hollywood, Jurgens-Ling said.

As newscaster from 1960 through 1965, Ling supervised and directed KGGM's newscasts, filmed news stories and produced news specials. "My first words were 'Coors' and 'Clyde Jay,'" said Jurgens-Ling, who watched KGGM as a young child. His mother married Ling when the boy was 7. Coors Brewing Co. was a TV sponsor at the time.

"He was very charming, very witty," Jurgens-Ling said. "He enjoyed the limelight."

Ling, who served in the Army during World War II, began his radio career in the Philadelphia area after his discharge. He was news director and a disc jockey from 1950 to 1957, according to the family, and he interviewed celebrities such as Elvis Presley and Peggy Lee. Once in Albuquerque, he became involved in civic affairs, much as he had in Philadelphia. He was a member of the Lion's Club and once ran for a seat on the City Commission, as the governing body was then known.

Ling left the television station to work as an audiovisual specialist for the Department of Defense at Kirtland Air Force Base and headed the Motion Picture Production Division at Sandia National Laboratories' nuclear weapons school.

He worked as an audiovisual producer for the Army for the rest of his career, Jurgens-Ling said, and retired in 1985 at Fort Huachuca, Ariz. Ling is also survived by his wife, Phyllis, of Sierra Vista, Ariz.; three daughters, Judy Sifford, Barbara Davis and Leslie Polychrones; and seven grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Memorial services will be held Thursday evening at 7 at Gabaldon Memorial Chapel, 1000 Old Coors Road SW, with private interment at the Santa Fe National Cemetery on Friday.
